Fulfillment of a hunch

To think it all started with a hunch 35 years ago. Win Stracke, Dawn Greening, Frank Hamilton, and Gertrude Soltker put their hearts, and everything they had, into the Old Town School of Folk Music. They were determined to create an education and performance opportunity for children and adults alike, to foster a love of music and art. And they succeeded.

From the beginning, the Old Town School of Folk Music has been a place where people come together to learn, share, and play. A place where the joy of music, which is the evolutionary source for all music, can be preserved and admired. A place where you can really be yourself with no pretensions. This school has always been about the journey, not the destination.

Today, the Old Town School embodies its founders' dream of a home where all can come to learn, share, and experience the power of joy and folk music. With 35 years of fine music and exemplary community service behind it, the Old Town School of Folk Music continues to honor its legacy.
